Playing for political access

Cannon defends spending

By MICHELLE KOWALSKI
Special Projects Editor

Freedom of speech, technology and integrity are the keys to a better campaign finance system, said Utah's 3rd Congressional District representative.

Rep. Chris Cannon, R-UT, said, "In America, we believe in free speech and that includes without compromise, the right to use one's money and resources to promote an idea."

An Oct. 26, 1996 article in The Salt Lake Tribune said "Cannon, a wealthy venture capitalist, has poured $1,171,883 into his race against Democratic Rep. Bill Orton in the 3rd Congressional District, according to a new financial disclosure."

Cannon said there were many reasons why he spent so much of his own money on his campaign.

"There's all kinds of reasons for that. Only three people beat incumbents this last year. Three people beat Democratic incumbents over Republicans. It was against the grain last year. The president was popular and the Republican candidate for president was not popular. It was a tough go to beat an incumbent, a Democratic incumbent."

Jeff Hartley, Cannon's press secretary, agrees that limiting freedom of speech is not a way to improve campaign financing.

"The problem is that legally, you run into the Constitution if you try to restrict someone's ability to speak or express themselves. And so, you can't limit the amount of money a candidate can spend on his own election. He has the right to promote himself as much as he wants."

Cannon said it is important for Americans to ask themselves if they want the government controlling public and political debate. He said the thought reminded him of Russia, China and pre-war Germany.

Another point that Cannon felt would help the campaign finance system was the decreasing price of computers.

"The real revolution in campaign finance and individual contributions and volunteers is the cheapness of net computers."

"For $200 or $300, now you can be online with your television and your current telephone cord. That means people get email, people can look at web pages, people can go out and get information on their own. And I'm hoping that politicians will be on the cutting edge of encouraging people to communicate that way," Cannon $300,000. But Cook declined.

Anderson called Cook's tactics disgusting, but Cook said he felt it is important to self-fund causes one believes in. According to the final FEC reports, Cook held a 2-to-1 money advantage over Anderson.

An advantage Anderson dubbed both unfair and unethical. "The voters are deserving of a substantive campaign, one that is not governed by Merrill Cook's bank account," Anderson said in November's campaign.

Cook stood his ground and said, "I believe in using some of my resources for the things I'm fighting for."

And when the dust cleared, Cook emerged as a perhaps unlikely ally for campaign finance reform. "There is an urgent need for campaign finance reform in our country," Cook said. A statement that has become Cook's battle cry of late.

Cook and other congressional newcomers launched a Freshman Bipartisan Campaign Finance Reform Task Force early January. The task force was established with the goal to discipline federal campaigning.

But Cook was soon disappointed in the task force's seeming lack of power. "I was outraged," Cook said, "when political forces on the Hill gutted six months of work by the Freshman Campaign Finance Reform Task Force."

The task force, consisting of 12 freshmen representatives, worked six months to propose improvements to current campaign laws. And in the end endorsed a broad resolution to support campaign finance reform.

So, Cook took the issue on himself and sponsored the "sunshine" bill. Though the bill is not as strict a reform as Cook originally sought after, it is one he said has the best chance of prompt passage.

The sunshine bill has a simple premise, Cook said: Let the public be judge, jury and executioner when it comes to campaign funding. If the public does not like what it sees on the Internet, it can give the most fitting punishment available for a political candidate — vote against him or her.

Cook said that "the bill will hopefully be passed in time to prevent some of the abuses in the 1996 campaign from happening in 1998." Cook, full sponsor of the bill, is currently seeking co-sponsors.

"Politicians have been paying lip service to campaign finance reform for too long," Cook said. "It's time to start walking the walk."

Campaign Finance Vocabulary

Bundling: This is the practice of taking small donations from individuals and combining them for a specific candidate. Interest groups use this to technically stay within the legal limit on contributions.

Contribution Limits: Under this law — put into effect in 1974 — an individual can contribute a total of no more than $25,000 to elections (primary, caucus, or general election), or to national political party committees, or to national action committees, or to national political party committees. An individual can donate no more than $1,000 per election for a candidate. Primaries, runoffs and general elections count as one election, so an individual can donate up to $3,000 for a specific candidate.

Compulsory Union Dues: These are dues that members of a union must pay. Many unions will use these dues to contribute to political candidates. Republicans want to prohibit this because they argue that unions should donate to the Democratic party.

Federal Election Commission (FEC): This federal agency, created in 1974, oversees federal campaigns, making sure that rules and regulations are being followed. Many consider the FEC to not be effective in acting on campaign abuses.

Hard Money: This type of "money" is from PACs and individuals to candidates. It is referred to as "hard money" because it must be within the limits of the law. In other words, this is the money that is legally donated.

Independent Expenditures: This money is spent for forms of communication, including advertisements over the t.v., direct mail, etc. This money is independent because it is not affiliated with a candidate, and may be used to expressly advocate a candidate. To be independent, they cannot work on a candidate's campaign, and must identify itself in the advertisement.

Issue Advocacy and Advertising: These are advertisements funded by a group that focuses on a specific issue, like family values. However, often these ads implicitly support a specific candidate. Because the candidate is not mentioned, no campaign laws apply.

Matching Funds: Candidates who agree to limit their spending during the primaries for presidential campaigns are eligible for dollar-for-dollar matching funds from the federal government. In the 1996 campaign, Clinton and Dole received $37 million in primary matching funds, and around $62 million for their fall campaigns.

PACs (Political Action Committees): Individuals that share common interests (such as business, labor, or single-issue) form a group to donate money to candidates. By law they can only donate $5,000 per candidate per election.

Public Financing: This financing comes from taxpayers and is only available to presidential candidates. The general election is completely funded by public financing, and the candidates cannot accept private donations. In 1996 the limit was $61.8 million per candidate.

Soft Money: This is money raised from state and national parties. They are supposed to be used for party-building activities such as encouraging people to vote. However, most people believe that much of the money is used to help candidates. This money is largely unregulated. There is no limit on the amount of money a donor can contribute, but contributions over $200 must be disclosed.

Spending Limit: Presidential candidates who accept matching funds are really the only ones that must follow spending limits. Democrats are in favor of spending limits, while Republicans argue it is an infringement on the First Amendment.

Hatch's Utah donations drop; Majority are from out-of-state

By SARA PANAG
World/National Editor

Sen. Hatch's on-hand cash balance available for election, as of June was $322,269. This was much lower than Sen. Alfonse D'Amato's balance, which is $8,630,077, though Sen. Hatch has until the year 2000 before he is up for re-election.

According to the Federal Election Committee Information website, funds from Utah individuals dropped lower each year from 1993/94 cycle to the 1997/98 cycle. In 1993-94, 33 percent of contributions were from out of state. Of the $934,978, $284,444 was from Utah.

In the 1995-96 cycle, $39,4950 were from out of state contributors and Utah contributors gave $6,190, just 14 percent. For the 1997-98 cycle, to date, Utah individuals gave just 5 percent, $2,250, and the rest, $39,820 came from out of state.

There are different ways in which an individual may choose to give to a campaign election committee. It can be direct from the individual, through an employer or a political action committee (PAC), the latter being more popular.

For example, during the 1993-94 cycle, Kennecott PAC gave a total of $5000 to the Hatch Election Committee, and in the 1995-96 cycle, the Kennecott PAC gave $2000 to the Hatch Election Committee which gave back $1000 received in 1995.

Millionaire Donald Trump contributed $1000, this June, to the Hatch Election Committee through Trump Enterprises.

G Frank Joklik, Chairman of the Board of Trustees for the Salt Lake Olympic Committee, gave to the Hatch Election Committee and other committees directly and through PACs, according to the FECInfo site. In 1993 and 1994, Joklik listed his contribution source as self-employed and a consultant, respectively, to the Hatch Election Committee. In 1996, Joklik gave to various committees through the Kennecott Corporation, M K Gold Co and as a consultant.

FBI recovers large T-rex fossils

HELENA, Mont. — The Federal Bureau of Investigation has recovered some fossilized remains of a Tyrannosaurus rex that were removed from U.S. government land near Glasgow, bureau officials announced Saturday.

Thomas T. Kubic, Special Agent in Charge of the bureau's Salt Lake City Division, said the FBI and the federal Farm Service Agency determined Tuesday that both lower jaws of a T-rex skull had been removed from the government-owned site in eastern Montana during the previous weekend.

The fossils will be inspected by paleontologists within the next few days to determine if they were damaged during the removal.

University of Notre Dame paleontologist Keith Rigby, who is digging at the site, said the T-rex may be the largest ever found.

Kubic said two people agreed during the week to turn over the fossils to two-third party intermediaries on the condition that the intermediaries give them to Gov. Marc Racicot.

Racicot asked that the fossils instead be delivered to the FBI, which took possession of them Friday evening in Great Falls.

Germany trying to revive Zeppelin

FRIEDRICHSHAFEN, Germany — Germany launched a new-generation zeppelin Thursday, hoping to revive the dirigible industry six decades after the Hindenburg crashed in flames over New Jersey.

Watched by thousands of spectators, the white-and-blue prototype zeppelin successfully completed a 45-minute maiden flight over this Lake Constance harbor, birthplace of famous zeppelins like the Hindenburg, which once took wealthy passengers around the world.

Zeppelin travel ended early in World War II, partly because of the fiery crash of the Hindenburg.

Vegas marriage records now online

LAS VEGAS — Breathless callers say they were drunk and aren't sure if they exchanged vows with someone. Others who wake up alone remember saying "I do" — but to whom?

Left to sort out the tangles that come with tying the knot in Las Vegas is the Clark County Recorder's Office. With more than 440 marriages recorded daily, the office is among the busiest in the world. Last year, there were nearly 105,000 marriages.

The office is so inundated with requests for marriage records that it's putting its database online, beginning today.

Drawn by some of the most liberal marriage laws in the country, couples by the thousands flock to this gambling mecca for quickie, no-frills wedding ceremonies at one of the city's 50 chapels. Unlike most states, no blood test or waiting period is required for the $35 marriage license.

Search for woolly mammoth DNA fails

TOKYO — Japanese and other scientists searched Siberian ice fields this month but failed to find the 10,000-year-old frozen sperm needed to recreate a woolly mammoth.

The research team, led by genetics specialist and veterinarian Kazufumi Goto, returned last week from a site along the Kolimaya River in western Siberia, where a number of mammoth fossils have been found buried under permafrost.

Goto, an assistant professor at Kagoshima University, said Friday the group uncovered part of a leg of a woolly mammoth and 34 other frozen fossils but no mammoth sperm. The fossils were left with a woolly mammoth institute in Russia.

In all, 34 researchers including British and Russian scientists took part in the search, which was funded partly by private Japanese businesses, he said.

The group wants to find fossilized mammoth sperm cells to see if the ancient DNA contained inside has remained intact. Woolly mammoths have been extinct for 10,000 years.

If the DNA is whole, the group hopes to use the cells to fertilize a live elephant and produce a half-elephant, half-mammoth offspring.

Cannon said if people could look on the Internet and see exactly who is supporting which candidate, they could make their own decisions on voting. All of the information would be available for everyone to see.

"I believe that if you give Americans information — this is who is funding this candidate — they will make a decision," Cannon said.

Cannon is supporting a bill by John Doolittle, which suggests the importance of our updated technology.

"I've signed onto a bill by John Doolittle, which would eliminate soft money, would eliminate the cap on how much money can be put in any particular campaign, but requires immediate, within 24-hour disclosure by electronic means."

"...you run into the Constitution if you try to restrict someone's ability to speak or express themselves ... you can't limit the amount of money a candidate can spend on his own election. He has the right to promote himself as much as he wants."

—Rep. Chris Cannon, R-UT

How the public looks at its politicians also can affect the image of campaign financing.

Americans tend to have a preconceived notion that most politicians are corrupt. "There's a lot of dirt, but the American public has that perception of politicians. It isn't correct," Hartley said.

"From what I've seen, a lot of members of Congress back here truly believe in what they do. They believe they can make a significant contribution to the efforts of making a better society," Hartley said. "They believe in what they work on, they are hard working, they're good people, even if they are completely opposed on what they believe."

Cannon also testified about the integrity of our senators and congressmen in Washington, D.C.

Scripture of the Day

"And now behold, I say unto you, my brethren, if ye have experienced a change of heart, and if ye have felt to sing the song of redeeming love, I would ask, can ye feel so now?"

—Alma 5:26

Michael Qualter likes this scripture because it is "a question one needs to ask him/herself each day -- it is something we must always feel." Qualter is a junior from Methuen, Massachusetts, majoring in history.

A TRADITION OF SERVICE: This photo of BYUSA volunteers, taken in May 1995, shows that BYU students have been making service to others a part of their education for many years.

Serve" should be an important part of students' lives both during and after school.

Granes said, "I feel better when I serve. I know it should be a part of my daily life."

"(Service) is not a matter of convenience," Pond said.

He said that the reason for providing ideas for service is so that students will serve more often.

"We hope they will feel the spirit of service and continue giving it throughout their lives," Pond said.

The service projects were changed from outside to inside activities because of the rain.

Students performed custodial labor in different buildings on campus.

"It has not been easy, but I think it is a great thing that it happened," Pond said.

Because of the rain, the sod-laying project was postponed until Monday at 4 p.m. at the west side of the ASB. Everyone is invited to help.

Poetry comes from life author says

By MAUREEN JONES
Universe Staff Writer

BYU's current poet-in-residence and Christiansen Professor of Poetry spoke about his collection of poetry and the different stages of his life that each collection represents in the Book of the Semester Lecture Thursday.

Leslie Norris' book Collected Poems was chosen as the Fall Semester 1997 book of the semester by the College of General Education and Honors.

Norris said that a collection of poems was "a body of work which you can stand by, large enough to be considerable."

This collection is a compilation of past collections he has had published.

Norris read several poems from his book and explained his thoughts and inspiration for each poem at the lecture. Norris said that Collected Poems represents a sequence of statements about his life.

The first poem in his collection, "The Loud Winter," is from his first collection of poetry. It is a comment on the experience of war, Norris said.

"I wanted to mourn, applaud and bring alive men of the generation," he said.

Norris said he moved on in his next collection to writing about children he observed as a principal of a school in the poem "Finding Gold."

As he had three collections published, Norris said he then began to write about fewer things.

"Perhaps I use the past more often to look at the future," he said.

"Poets are educated by chance," Norris said. The actions that go towards putting a poem together are random, he said.

The natural world is used as a symbol in his poetry, Norris said. Norris said a poet should "make the objects of (its) observation the texture of (its) lines, the repetition of the poet himself."

Norris said he reached a point in his life where writing became difficult for him to continuously do. He turned to translating the work of other poets. This allowed him to see the world with another pair of hands and eyes, he said.

When Norris wrote his most recent poems, he used some scenes from Utah as background for a few poems.

Teens lives can turn with horses help

By KIMBERLY WOODLAND
Universe Staff Writer

Four at-risk teens wearing T shirts saying "I'd rather be on a horse than on drugs," helped Director Greg Kersten present a clinic on Equine Assisted Psychotherapy on Friday.

Founder of Equine Services and Equine Assisted Psychotherapy Greg Kersten said the Aspen Ranch in Loa and Equine Services has developed a youth program for at-risk teen-agers that involves horse training techniques.

Kersten brought his clinic and several of his students to BYU to demonstrate to those interested in working with troubled teen-agers a therapy he has been using.

EAP is a collaborative effort between a therapist and a horse instructor. The treatment uses horses to work through difficult issues with kids and adults. The goal is to generate a positive engagement between the teen-agers and others they have contact with.

These therapy sessions deal with anger, honesty, self esteem, attitude and coping mechanisms. It helps build team work, problem solving, leadership, communication, relationships and confidence, according to Equine Services News, a newsletter published by Equine Assisted Psychotherapy.

Kersten has had more than 10 years of experience working with this therapy.

He said the body language between a horse and a person is a non-technical lie detector.

"Riding bare back requires more mental concentration than physical strength," Kersten said. "To stay on a horse, a person must mentally concentrate to keep their body central and balanced."

When a person lies, the body physically moves. When a teen-ager becomes unfocused, it may be evidence that they are lying. A dishonest reaction is easily detected because balance and concentration are lost, he said.

Besides detecting dishonesty, Kersten believes a better relationship with a horse causes a better relationship with people. His primary focus is acceptable behavior.

John, a 14 year-old at-risk presenter from Seattle said "It helped me to treat others better, and build relationships."

Study Abroad helps students see the world, other cultures

By SHANNA GHAZNAVI
AND TROY LARSON
Universe Staff Writer

For three years BYU's Study Abroad Program has enabled a record number of students to be educated, both academically and culturally, in other countries, said Director of Study Abroad, Rod Boynton.

"There is a way to get everyone overseas, if they just plan for it," Boynton said.

He suggested becoming proficient in a foreign language and taking classes on other cultures as good ways to prepare for a study abroad experience.

Program Assistant of the Study Abroad Program, Chelita Pate, said students can receive General Education credit as well as gaining an appreciation for other cultures and peoples when they study abroad.

"They get the additional experience in the country that they are not going to get in the classroom. Once they go abroad, they get a taste of the international scene and come back with confidence — academically and otherwise," she said.

"A BYU education is not just a Provo education," Boynton said. He said he feels there are many students who need the opportunity of learning about other cultures.

BYU sponsors more study abroad programs than many other major universities in the country, Boynton said.

At an open house Thursday, the Study Abroad Program invited students to come in an find out what it had to offer. Counseling and applications were available to students who were investigating study abroad for varied reasons.

Melissa Standing, a sophomore majoring in elementary education from Altadena, Calif., said "I think it would be interesting to learn about other cultures."

She said she is thinking about going to either Jerusalem or England and that she's happy she will have a faculty adviser to help her.

"I really want to go," said Lindsay Larson, an open major freshman from Orange, Calif.

Her grandfather was a past director of the Jerusalem Center and she said, "It's our family thing. Everyone goes to Jerusalem."

Aside from Jerusalem and England, Japan, the Dominican Republic, China, Madrid, Vienna and other countries were also represented at the study abroad open house.

"I would recommend any student wanting to learn about the culture go abroad. There's only so much you can learn in a classroom," said Jeffrey Davis, a second year graduate student who has studied abroad in Madrid.

Biology and Agriculture honor faculty and staff

By RAY HAMMOND
Universe Staff Writer

Come September, the college of Biology and Agriculture convenes annually to honor select staff and faculty with "College Achievement Awards." The awards ceremony is held during a banquet with all members of the college invited.

Awards were presented, Sept. 5, to an array of members including a stockroom manager, a secretary and director of the Benson Institute.

Sharon Eastwood, secretary for the Department of Animal Science, was the recipient of one of the "Distinguished Service Awards." She was recognized for her efficiency in handling an increasingly complex workload.

The "Creative Achievement Award," which honors excellence in research was presented to Phil S. Allen, Associate Professor for the Department of Agronomy and Horticulture.

Allen's achievements in seed germination have been extensive. His research earned him U.S. Patent No. 5,232,465 in 1993. Another award category, the "College Professorship Award" includes an endowment for research in the recipients department.

Dennis K. Shiozawa of the Zoology department was the recipient of this year's one-year professorship and is excited about the endowment. "It's nice to have since it will fund a number of undergraduate and graduate projects," Shiozawa said.

Shiozawa's accomplishments are also extensive, including active membership in nine professional societies, and an investigator in 38 grants and funded research projects.

This year's other College Achievement Awards recipients are the following:

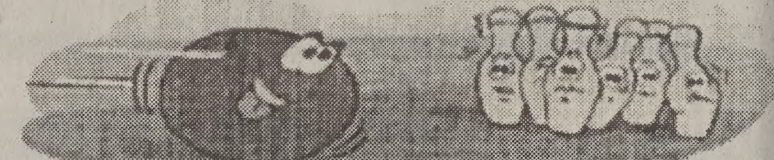

- Distinguished Service Award — Don Karr, zoology stockroom manager
- Distinguished Service Award — Keith Kling, instrument shop
- Teaching Excellence Award — Lee Braithwaite, Department of Zoology
- Martin Professorship (three-year) Award — N. Paul Johnston, Director of the Benson Institute

His research interests and publications have included the influence of religious commitment on physical and mental health status and the use of analytic systematic reviews in reviewing policy-relevant research, and the provision and delivery of mental health services in both the primary care and specialized mental health services sectors.

Drawing upon published research sources, Dr. Larson will review data concerning the extensive spirituality of the U.S. public — particularly during times of personal crisis, stress, or medical illness. He will also discuss how issues of spirituality have been inadequately handled by health care professionals and researchers. He will show that existing research on the health benefits of religion and spirituality is, indeed, scientifically credible.

Sweeney Todd' a tasty show about revenge and foul play

by WILLIAM BENAC
Universe Staff Writer

rend the tale of Sweeney Todd at the Pioneer Theatre many and be swept along with the newest production, with a show that one would expect in New York City rather than Salt Lake

Sweeney Todd, the Demon Barber of Fleet Street," which opened Wednesday night, will captivate audiences until Oct. 4 with its acting and stage design done at a level to please even the most discriminating of audiences.

It is a direct result of the brevity and years of experience of the talented cast and crew.

Aspects of this "musical thriller," as it is billed, maintain consistency with each other, both in mood and in excellence.

The disturbing story of Sweeney Todd tells of a barber/baker duo who combine to get revenge on a man that has mistreated them.

Sweeney Todd (played by Michael Medeiros) slices the throats of select customers in his barbershop, then slides down a ramp to Mrs. Todd's (Mary Ellen Ashley) shop where they profitably turn them into the tastiest meat in London.

Throughout there are also the poignant longings for fairness and tender love, making the play all the more poignant. The viewer is drawn much sucked into loyalty for the play's killers, Todd and Lovett, while at the same time feeling reluctant in this because of the manner in which they administer acts.

The protagonists' personalities are grating while their acts are gripping.

The sets have a deep obscurity that complements the ambiguity of the viewer has for the characters.

The earth tones combine with dramatic lighting and rich textures to create a depth of atmosphere that is a bit impenetrable, leading to a viewer's uncertain feelings.

The bright, pleasing music rising from the orchestra pit normally condemns the antagonists, Judge Turpin (Robert Peterson) and The Beadle (Michael Mandell) while painting the protagonists, Todd and Lovett, brightly. None of them is more sinister than another though.

Such is the ambiguity of "Sweeney Todd, the Demon Barber of Fleet Street."

All of it strengthens the play's effect of walking the audience along a fine line between rooting for the good guys and the bad guys at the same time.

Because this production of Sweeney Todd is a musical, the audience is required to be additionally attentive in order to pick out the witty lyrics of the Pioneer Theatre Company's production.

Lifestyle reporter gets lost in corn maze; relies on intuition and flashlight to escape

by EMELY ARROYO
Universe Staff Writer

Corn mazes are things I mastered in a third grade, or so I thought. The MAIZE, a six-acre corn maze at Thanksgiving Point, is no different.

At approximately 8:30 p.m., my friend Cami and I walked past the smells of the animal farm and our way to the entrance of the maze. There, a girl told us how the maze was in the state of Utah and informed us of the shortcuts doors we could resort to for help.

She explained how it generally takes people an hour to complete the maze. A guy walked out with his flashlight and said, "How many exits are there?" he asked me. "One," the girl said.

"And I didn't use any shortcuts," the guy shouted.

Watching this enthusiastic boy and I were determined to beat him. We decided to try to beat this maze without using shortcuts.

We took three shortcut doors either side of the maze and over the bridge to the little adventure.

When we made decisions based on reasoning "If we were the only people?" We made a quick decision. We took a few steps, turned left, then straight, then — dead end.

We retraced our steps, turned right, then left, kept on the path a little longer, then — dead end!

Now we had to change our strategy. Instead of thinking like a maze, we decided to follow our instincts. "Come on, we can do this ... remember, you are an intrepid reporter," Cami encouragingly told me.

We went back to the beginning. "Okay, we will go straight, then turn," I said taking charge of the flashlight as well as making the decisions. We reached another dead end.

At this point, we decided to use a completely different strategy. We would follow the people ahead of us. We caught up to two guys who had just escaped from the maze accidentally and had come back in to complete it the right way. However, they too were a bit directionally-challenged and continuously led us to dead ends.

We gave up on those guys and decided to follow two ten-year-old girls who had figured out a path to one of the shortcut doors. The little girls used the shortcut without any reservations, while Cami and I simply glared at the door.

Torn over whether we should use the shortcut, we quarreled for a few moments, then walked past the door and continued on our way.

Next we encountered individuals on a group date. The group had split up into couples and challenged each other to see which one could complete the puzzle first. They excitedly departed from their meeting area and ventured into the deep, dark turns of the maze.

In the meantime, Cami and I had decided to return to the shortcut door and use it. We finally reached a bridge. It was promising but tricky. The view on the bridge allowed us to see the exit, but there were still many paths we had to walk to get there.

"It isn't a cruel joke. We just have to be smarter than the maze," I assured Cami. She wasn't convinced. About forty minutes later, after having circled the northeastern part of the state thrice, we used another shortcut door and finally reached the exit (yeah!). It only took us an hour and a half to finish.

Because of my lack of patience and poor sense of direction (if I even have one), I walked out of the maze a bit frustrated and tired. Also, because it was nighttime, people who were unfamiliar with proper flashlight etiquette, kept blinding us with their flashlights, creating some displeasure for me.

However, Cami enjoyed the whole experience, despite the annoying flashlights. In fact, she wants to return with a huge group of friends later this month.

The MAIZE, a definite challenge, is at Thanksgiving Point in Lehi (exit 287 from I-15) and is expected to run through Halloween. Cost is $5 for adults, and $3 for children, with discounts offered to families and coupon-holders. Visitors are admitted Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday from 1 p.m. until 10 p.m., and Saturday from 10 a.m. until 10 p.m.

Snowboarders to get head start on winter with new 'Kingpin Chronicles' stunt video

By NICHOL HOBSON
Universe Staff Writer

Snowboarders will have a chance to experience snowboarding in Salt Lake before it even snows in Utah.

Tonight the Zephyr Club will premiere "The Kingpin Chronicles," a snowboarding video featuring local and professional snowboarders defying the laws of motion with impressive moves and stunts on the slopes.

The Zephyr Club, at 301 S. West Temple in Salt Lake City, will have two showings of "The Kingpin Chronicles." The first showing, for patrons under 21, is at 6:30 p.m. and costs $3; the second showing, for 21 and older, is at 8:30 p.m. and costs $6.

The 8:30 p.m. showing will be followed by the bands Acrobat Down, from Denver, Colo., and Eastwood, featuring Whitey, snowboarder and producer of the film.

Skiing videos featuring skiers challenging cliffs and slopes have been around for skiers' enjoyment for years. Now snowboarding videos are following that trend and catering to a different crowd on the slopes and becoming more and more popular among snowboarders.

"I'd much rather watch a (snowboarding) video than read a (snowboarding) magazine, you get to see more," said Jef Saunders, a junior from Laguna Hills, Calif., majoring in zoology.

A representative from Bilt Productions and Snowboard Apparel believes that this is one of the best snowboarding videos made.

Following the premiere of "The Kingpin Chronicles" there will be a giveaway of prizes such as T-shirts, beanies, hats, and snowboards from companies like Joyride, Hotskates, Original Sin, Dub, Subtle, and Blunt magazine.

"I think (snowboarding videos) are really cool, but most play too hard of music for my taste," said Saunders. Despite differences in music tastes, snowboarders of all abilities should find "The Kingpin Chronicles" motivating and inspiring as well as entertaining.

The video features snowboarding clips from California, Colorado, Oregon, Utah, Washington, Canada, Europe and New Zealand and promises to keep its viewers on the edge of their seats and eager for snow.

BYU defense embarrasses Sun Devils

By SCOTT BELL
Universe Sports Writer

Oh what a difference two weeks makes.

Two weeks after being blown out at home by Washington, BYU did an about-face and kicked 14th-ranked Arizona State 13-10 in Tempe Saturday night.

"I told the team in all my years of coaching, I've never been prouder of a team who overcame adversity and hung on to win," said BYU head coach LaVell Edwards.

The Cougars showed marked improvement in nearly every phase of the game. The maligned BYU defense gave up only 245 yards and allowed only one touchdown and a field goal.

Kevin Feterik locked down the starting quarterback job with a brilliant performance. The sophomore completed 17 of 30 passes for 328 yards and repeatedly came through on third down.

Ben Cahoon proved to be Feterik's best friend and BYU's next big-play receiver, hauling in eight passes for 219 yards.

And Brian McKenzie, with his ailbone feeling fine, rushed for 113 yards on 23 carries.

But despite all that, BYU found itself deadlocked in a 10-10 thriller with time running out in the fourth quarter. The reason can be traced to one source: special teams.

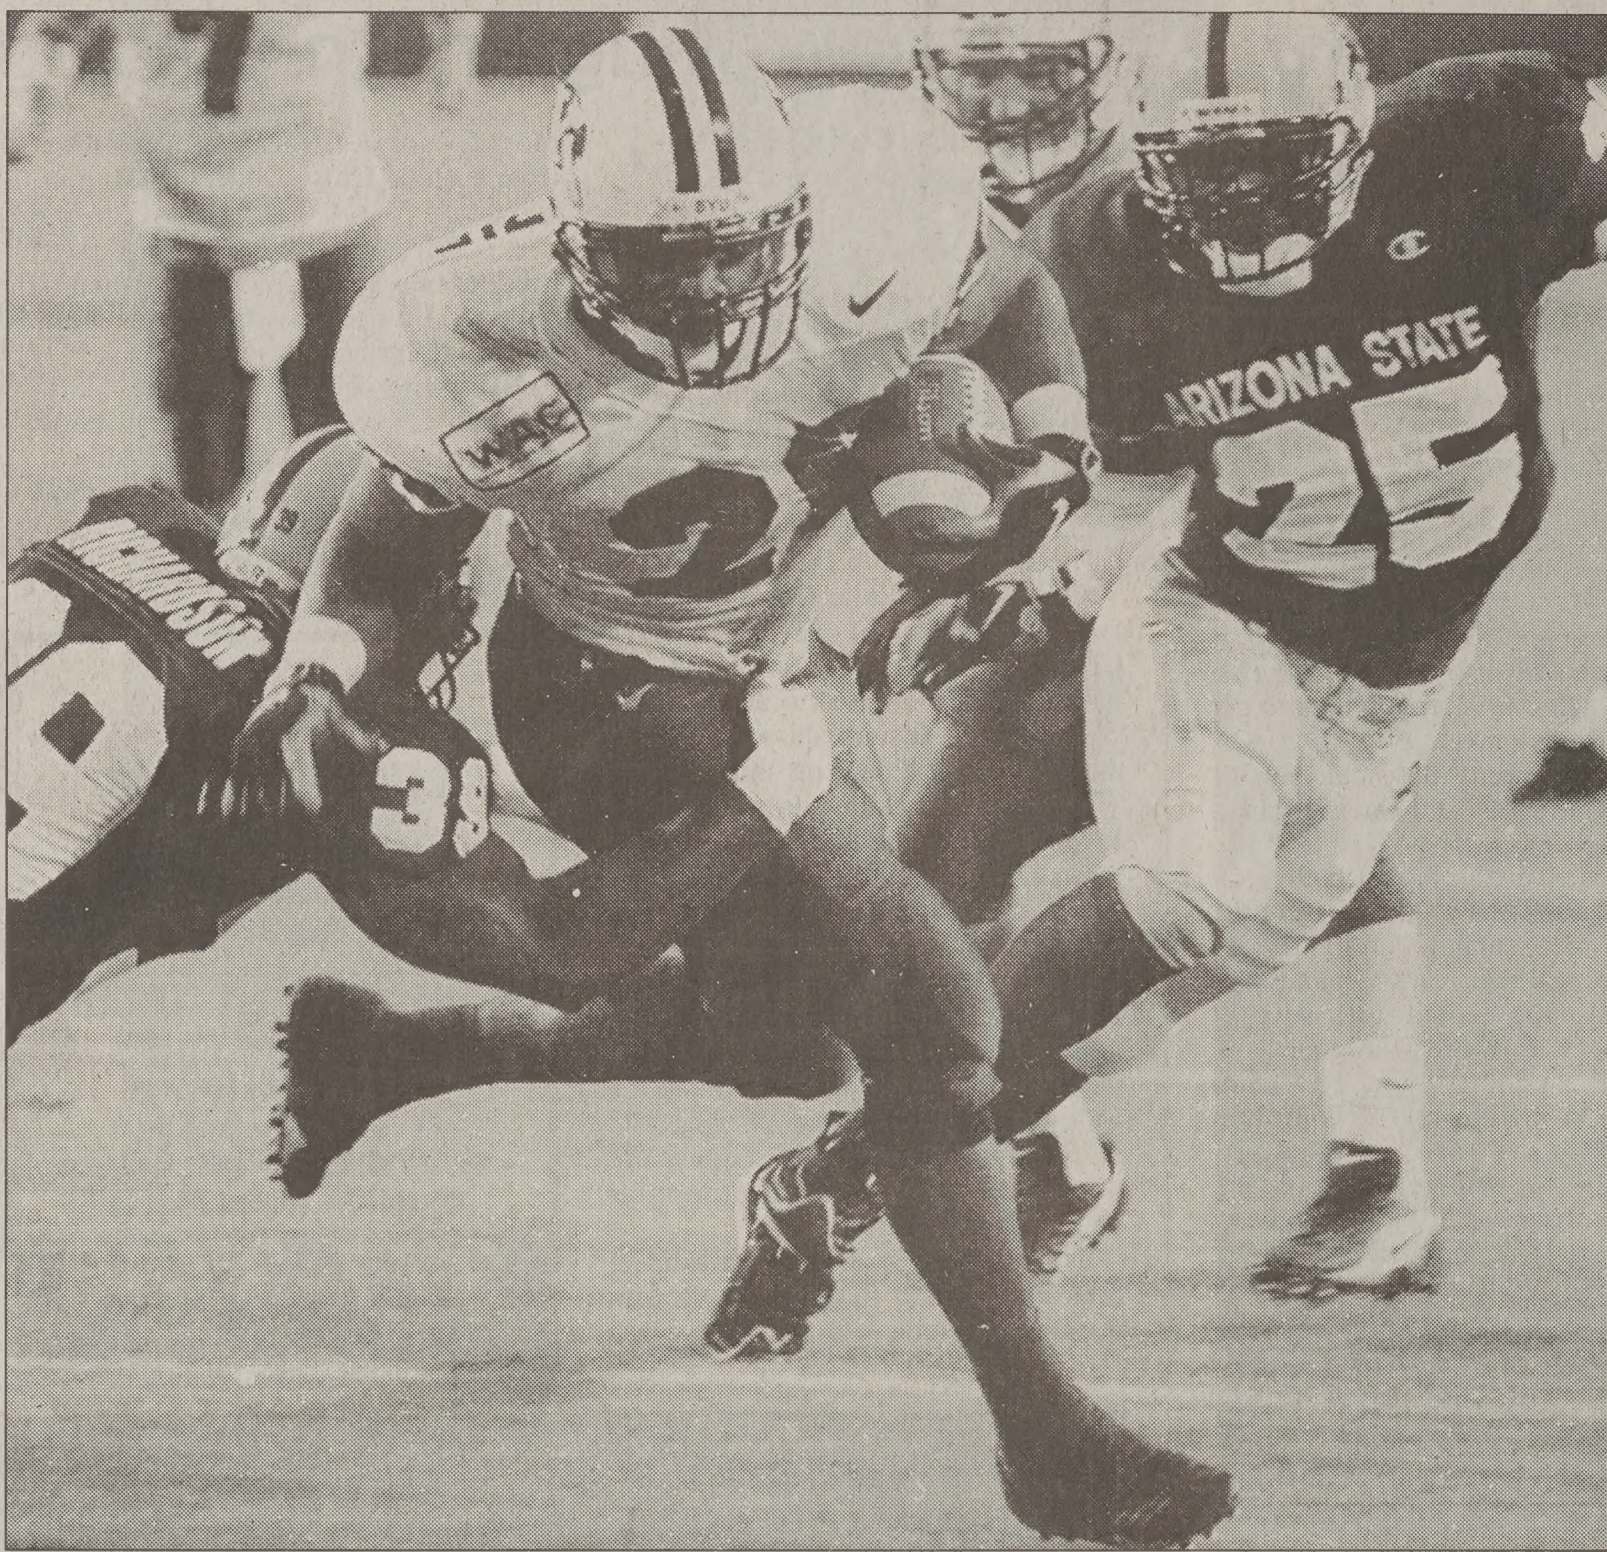

Special teams play nearly cost BYU a game it deserved to win.

Kicker Owen Pochman missed field goals from 42 and 48 yards out and had a 31-yard attempt blocked. Punt returner Aaron Roderick dropped three punts, and his replacement Aaron Dabney dropped another. Roderick's first drop was recovered by Arizona State on the BYU 13-yard line. It set up Mike Martin's one-yard touchdown plunge, the one Arizona State touchdown.

Add those plays together with McKenzie's fumble at the Arizona state two-yard line early in the second half, and BYU was entangled in a barnburner that could have been a 9-3 yawner.

No matter. The BYU defense came up huge, holding Arizona State to just 95 yards and no points in the second half.

"It was kind of weird, talking to the other defense guys. We would go out there, and we had total confidence," said safety Jason Walker. "The coaches gave us the game plan, and we were totally confident in stopping them. We were laughing, and having fun out there."

Arizona State found the scoreboard first, taking a 3-0 lead on Robert Nycz's 44-yard field goal in the first quarter. BYU answered on the first play of the second quarter, when McKenzie jaunted into the end zone from six yards out. The run capped a 10-play, 80-yard drive.

Martin's run put the Sun Devils back on top 10-7 with 9:57 remaining in the first half. Pochman evened the score at 10 with a 45-yard field goal with 4:35 left in the first half.

The score remained tied until the fourth quarter when Pochman nailed a 32-yard field goal with 4:39 left in the game.

Spencer Reid and Andrew Nash sacked Arizona State quarterback Ryan Kealy on third down of the Devils' ensuing possession, forcing a punt.

After BYU punted back, Kealy threw four straight incompletions, turning the ball over to BYU with 1:50 remaining and sealing the Cougar win.

"That's the way we need to go in and beat them," Walker said. "We proved to ourselves that we could go in there, and go down to the wire and beat a PAC-10 team. That's going to be a real confidence builder down the road."

The loss jolted the Sun Devils back to No. 24 in the Associated Press poll. Their standing place, their one spot behind BYU who regained a national ranking with the upset.

Women's soccer team pulls dramatic victories in Irvine

By LESLIE ARMSTRONG
Universe Sports Writer

The BYU women's soccer team returned home Saturday night after a tough but victorious weekend at the Nike University of California Irvine Invitational in Irvine, Calif.

The Cougars squeaked by their weekend opponents, winning both games by one goal. BYU beat Oregon State 1-0, and UC Irvine 3-2.

BYU won the opening game of the tournament by scoring the first and only goal of Friday night's game against Oregon State with 1:16 left in the game. The ball was headed in by forward Michelle Jensen. Kim Lowe and Maren Hendershot were credited with the assist. Jensen's goal was long-awaited for BYU, which outshot the Oregon State Beavers 27 to one.

"We dominated the game but weren't very lucky," said goalkeeper Camille Thomas. "They packed the defense and we just couldn't score."

"We kicked the ball in every place near the goal, the left post, right post, high post, and we just couldn't get it in the net," said BYU head coach Jennifer Rockwood in a news release.

"Oregon State's keeper had some terrific saves."

BYU was able to put more goals on the scoreboard Saturday night when it beat UC Irvine 3-2.

The first goal of the game was scored by Hendershot who went one-on-one with the goalie. She placed the ball inside the right post after dribbling all the way in from midfield.

The next two goals were scored by UC Irvine, which outshot BYU 7-4 in the first half.

"Both goals were scored on questionable (penalty kicks), and we actually dominated the game," said Thomas, who held UC Irvine scoreless in the second half.

The Cougars tied it up just before half time with a goal by sophomore Karen Robbins.

The final goal was off a penalty kick awarded to BYU in the first five minutes of the second half. All-American forward Shauna Rohbock took the penalty kick and scored the game-winning goal.

BYU's victories this weekend give the team an 8-0 record and increase its winning streak to a school record 16 games.

The Cougars will play at home Friday.

"We kicked the ball in every place near the goal, the left post, the right post, high post, and we just couldn't get it in the net."

Unsatisfied with a tie with U.C.-Berkeley the night before, BYU took out its frustrations on Cal State-Stanislaus with a 4-0 drubbing Saturday night.

The BYU squad dominated the game, holding CSU to no substantial scoring chances with stellar play by the BYU defense and goalkeepers Brian Jolley and Matthew Bond. Four different BYU players scored in the game.

BYU got off to a quick start with a goal by Robert Millet four minutes into the contest. BYU kept pressure on during the rest of the half with several scoring opportunities, but went into the half with a 1-0 lead.

Once again, BYU wasted no time at the beginning of the second half to extend its lead. Senior midfielder Steve Crook scored just six minutes into the half, and Mike Essig and Jeremy Bailey teamed up for another score 15 minutes later. The final goal came 30 minutes into the half when Nathan Lowe was fouled in the penalty box on a speedy run through the defense. Lowe converted the penalty kick, bringing the score to 4-0.

But scoring goals wasn't the only thing BYU had to deal with on the field. Numerous yellow cards were issued during the game, and a Stanislaus player was ejected 15 minutes into the second half for his unusually rough play. One foul on the spectator side of the field in the first half sent the crowd into a frenzy as two players tangled in their attempts to get up from a slide-tackle.

"They were pretty physical, but we gave it right back," said Dave Bryan, a junior defender.

Despite the rough play on both sides of the ball, BYU showed they were the dominant team, maintaining ball control for virtually the entire game and impressing the crowd with several shots rocketed towards the goal from outside the penalty box. The team found little in its play to complain about.

"It feels like the team's coming together," Bryan said. "We're playing our game, marking up well on defense, and we're finally beginning to finish."

Parking woes slow work on bus terminal; UTA confident they will get what they need

By KATRINA I. GULSTAD
Universe Staff Writer

One month into construction of a $1.43 million bus transfer station in Orem, a parking shortage has left University Mall and Utah Transit Authority officials unsure if buses will ever pass through it.

Workers broke ground Aug. 1 on the 1150 S. 750 East site, but it will remain barren unless more parking can be provided. The current plan allows for five spaces, about 95 shy of the estimated need. The Orem City Council approved the plan contingent on a written agreement between the UTA and the mall allowing com- muters to use mall parking.

Officials from UTA and the mall are working on a license agreement that would let the UTA use mall parking, but have yet to put it in writing, said University Mall Manager Rob Kallas. "We have told them that we would enter into some kind of license agree- ment similar to any other tenant," he said. "But there has not been an agreement finalized yet with UTA."

The Woodbury Corp. of Salt Lake City is writing up a contract to be reviewed, said Coralee Alder, UTA spokesperson. The agreement, she said, should be finalized in about a week. "I think we've got things under control. We don't anticipate any prob- lems," she said.

The terminal will replace the tempo- rary bus stop on the east side of the mall parking lot, which uses between 30 and 70 spaces, Kallas said. The new center is a stopping place for buses serving the Provo/Orem area and express buses along the Wasatch Front.

Provided an agreement is reached, the station is set to open by the sec- ond week of November, said Chris Humbert, an architect working on the terminal. "The parking situation will be finalized before buses start moving through. They are still hashing out the details, but we have been told by UTA that it is just a matter of getting all the parties together in one room," he said.

The terminal will consist of two 384-square-foot concrete buildings joined by a Teflon canopy similar to that of the Denver International Airport. One building will house tick- et sales, and the other will hold public restrooms and a driver break room.

Buses will enter the station on the north side and loop around to exit on the south. Benches will be provided for waiting passengers, and landscap- ing will complete the desired park- like effect, Humbert said.

The station's future, however, depends on a continual relationship between UTA and the mall. If final- ized, the license agreement will not guarantee UTA permanent use of mall parking, Kallas said. "A license agree- ment is able to be terminated," he said. That means if problems arise between the two parties, the mall reserves the right to revoke UTA's lease of parking space.

Kallas, though, does not foresee problems with its potential tenant. "I don't think there will be any con- flicts," he said.

Though no official agreement has been made, UTA is confident it will secure the needed parking from the mall, Alder said. "We shouldn't have any problems," she said.

Hundreds join in Provo Tabernacle to remember those less fortunate

By MARIESA WHITAKER
Universe Staff Writer

Over 200 people gathered in the Provo Tabernacle Sunday evening to participate in the International Day of Prayer sponsored by Habitat for Humanity International.

The service was an interdenominational effort that mixed music, prayer and the spoken word to remind the community of its responsibility to care for the homeless and the less fortunate.

"Everything we own really belongs to our Lord," said Roger Keller, BYU associate professor of church history and doctrine who spoke at the service. "They are not things to be kept for ourselves or our posterity. We are given what we are given to share it."

Keller spoke of the importance of rendering service outside the boundaries of individual congregations.

"There is probably not a congregation represented here that doesn't take care of their own members," he said. "But what disturbs me is when I hear of people not wanting to find a place for the homeless in our community, because they don't want 'that kind of person' in our neighborhood. Whose neighborhood should they go to if not to the heart of a Christian neighborhood?"

David Dominguez, a BYU law professor and former president of Habitat for Humanity's Utah County affiliate, also spoke at the service.

"The Lord is never done adding rooms to the mansions of the kingdom of God," he said. "God is never done creating room for his children."

DAY OF PRAYER: BYU Law Professor and former President of the Utah County affiliate of Habitat for Humanity David Dominguez spoke to hundreds who gathered at the Provo Tabernacle Sunday.

"Habitat for Humanity offers us the opportunity to accept the Lord's invitation to help him in this work," Dominguez said.

"We see ourselves not just as a group that can build a few homes," Dominguez said. "We see ourselves as people who can create a new habitat, a place where Christ-centered love can flourish. The homes are just an outward sign of an inward working."

"I was so encouraged to hear that Habitat for Humanity is active in this community," said Dan Ludwigsen, a member of the Tree of Life Lutheran church who sang at the service.

"After those two talks, I felt so inspired that the singing came easily," he said. "I was just glad to be able to participate."

"Everyone counts in the ministry of Habitat for Humanity," Dominguez, an Evangelical Christian, said. "You might think your contribution is so small, but in the hands of God, it becomes a miracle."

Recent testimony at campaign finance hearings may be most damaging to date

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A $5 million campaign offer scrawled on the back of a business card and handed to President Clinton. A phone call from Air Force One urgently seeking $1.5 million. A plea from a top White House aide to shred evidence.

A Florida businessman told senators Friday at the campaign fund-raising hearings that his story, bizarre as it sounded, was true. Democrats attacked it — and him — as unbelievable.

R. Warren Meddoff testified that at one point, in October 1996, he told the White House aide that the $5 million could grow to $55 million — to be sent over time to tax-exempt groups to help Clinton. He was acting, he said, on behalf of a Texas businessman to whom he had spoken weekly by phone for five years but had not met.

No donations were ever made, he said. It all started, Meddoff said, when he approached Clinton at a dinner with an offer of $5 million for the re-election campaign. Later, he received a fax listing tax-exempt organizations where donations could go, he testified.

Shortly afterward, he said, then-White House aide Harold Ickes called to say, "I sent you that fax in error, I shouldn't have sent it, would you please shred it." Meddoff said he didn't comply, because "there is no way that I was going to shred a document at the request of a White House official."

The White House said Ickes' fax wasn't meant to be a solicitation for donations, nor does Ickes — who has left the administration — recall ever demanding the document be destroyed.

"The credibility of this witness is apparent for all to see," White House special counsel Lanny Davis said.

Democrats angrily confronted Meddoff with evidence that he had offered a $5 million campaign donation to Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., in 1995, implying that the money was contingent on Dole's help with a deal between Meddoff's employer and the Republic of Bulgaria. Meddoff acknowledged he made a similar offer to Clinton. Neither donation was made.

"I think Hollywood ought to get together with you. You ought to write all this down, you know, and give it to them," said ranking committee Democrat John Glenn of Ohio.

Meddoff was the last witness, at least for now, on the theme of Democratic fund-raising misdeeds. The Governmental Affairs Committee announced an abrupt change of direction so it can have an effect on an overhaul of campaign finance rules.

Starting next week, the committee will scrutinize the explosive growth of "soft money" and independent expenditures — the unlimited donations by corporations, wealthy individuals and labor unions.

The decision was prompted by intense negotiations among senators to move legislation to the floor soon. A reform package would include a proposed ban on soft money.

On Friday, Meddoff stuck to his story despite criticism and ridicule from Democrats.

He said that after he made the $5 million offer to Clinton, Ickes called him from Air Force One, and the two men later had numerous conversations about the donations — including the possibility the amount would rise to $55 million.

In one conversation weeks from the election, Meddoff said, Ickes urgently asked for $1.5 million within 24 hours — and faxed a list of tax-exempt groups where they money could go. The shredding conversation ensued, the witness said.

Meddoff said the money would come from William Morgan, a businessman friend from Richardson, Texas — who would get the funds from a still pending bond sale. Morgan had asked that his donations go to tax-exempt organizations so he could deduct the contributions and avoid a huge tax bill from the business deal.

The deal fell through and the donations never were made, Meddoff said, prompting committee Democrats to attack Morgan as a scam artist. But they saved their major salvos for Meddoff.

Utah may be getting new TV station

By BART JARMAN
Universe guest writer

A new $10 million television station could be broadcasting from Provo the next few months, if a St. Louis based communications company has its way.

Roberts Broadcasting Co., which holds the license to Channel 16, plans broadcast under the call letters KZAR-TV. The station will draw most of its programming from the Warner Brothers Network as its official affiliate, but company president Steven C. Roberts said that the station will also broadcast independent programming and public service television.

"Even though we will cover the entire market, Utah County will be the center," Roberts said.

Utah County has the best environment and will frankly outgrow all of adjacent counties in the next few years, Roberts said.

The company recently secured a building permit and Federal Aviation Administration approval for a 240-foot broadcasting tower west of Utah Lake. The county, state, Brigham Young University and Utah Power are among the entities that have transmitters on Lake Mountain southwest of Lehi.

It will be the largest tower on the mountain, said Vern Olsen of Utah County's Telecommunication office. "We're excited to have them here," he said. "I think we have fixed the problems we thought they might have with interference."

According to Roberts, once construction begins the new station will be ready to broadcast in about 90 days.

"We are looking for studio sites now," Roberts said. The new station plans to locate its production studio somewhere in the Provo area. "Recently people have been coming out of the woodwork with possible sites."

Although the new station will not attempt to compete with Salt Lake stations, Roberts said, its signal will carry from Cedar City to Logan.

Along with regular national programming, the company plans to feature early morning magazine-style show and two half-hour news programs at 6 and 10 p.m. according to Roberts.

"We won't be emphasizing sensational programming," he said. "We tend to shy away from nontraditional, nonfamily types of programming."

The company plans to hire its 50 full-time employees locally to staff operation, providing training as needed.

Transactions that were itemized by the Hatch Election Committee in 1993-94, were transferred to the Friends of Orrin Hatch Committee.

Funds can be transferred from one account to another. Transfers sent and received are from non-party committees that are affiliated with the reporting committee. "Transfers" are exchanges of funds between affiliated political committees. "Affiliated" committees are those committees which are established, financed, maintained, or controlled by the same corporation, labor organization, person or group, according to the FEC.

Money coming in from a PAC carries more clout because the sums are larger and individuals contributing to the PAC have the same special interests.

Miscellaneous business sector, such as food, retail, chemical and other manufacturing, gave the most, a total of $21,550 in the 1995-96 cycle, to Sen. Hatch with the health sector coming in second contributing $19,646, according to the Center for Responsive Politics website.

With large sums of contributions coming from outside sources, concerns are raised that ties between officials and constituents are weakening. Funds from PACs are difficult to pinpoint because of various branches and organizations tied into the PACs, and individuals out of state have interest in issues that affect them, according to the CRP site.

The Federal Election Committee Information and Center for Responsive Politics websites lists information available under the Federal Incumbent Personal Financial Disclosure Reports. The addresses are www.crp.org and www.tray.com.
